Mr. Edmunds and soon the "General" appeared, and soon the "General" appeared, and coolly looking over the spacious dimensions of the Senator, said: "I thought my old friend, Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, had called to see me," After awhile "the old man" got into a good humor, and commenced talking, and just before the interview terminated he turned to Mr. Edmunds and said: "Now, sir, I have one favor to ask of you. I am only permitted to write to my [New Haven] wife once in three-months. Please offer a bill giving me permission to write oftener."

Mr. Edmunds, with a quiet smile, sand: "I certainly shall, General, for if you are only allowed to write once in three months to your wives your term month to bloom. allowed to write once in three months to your wives, your term must be a long one to get around, as you are credited with lifteen." PROFESSOR NATHAN SHEPPARD AT MOZART A large number of bills left over at the HALL LAST NIGHT.-The Young Men's Christian Association have by having firstclass lectures demonstrated the falsity of the common opinion that "Richmond peo-ple will not attend lectures." The present course has attracted every night large audiences. "Frank Stringfellow the Scout" packed the house to its utmost capacity, and last night there was not a vacant seat, and little standing-room, when Professor

Sheppard answered the conundrum, "Why Did She Marry Him?" Professor Sheppard came to Richmond as a stranger, being known only by reputa-tion as the author of the famous "Key-note" letters, "Shut Up in Paris," etc., and was a popular lecturer of wide reputa-tion. But he had not been talking many minutes before he was fully at home, had completely captured his audience, and brought down the house again and again

The lecturer made a witty, carnest, elo quent, and exceedingly sensible protest against the disadvantages under which women labor in contracting matrimonial alliances. The sketches of the society bean and the club-house husband were inimita-ble, and the portrait of the young man waiting to be rich before he marries was drawn with the hand of a master. His picture of the faults which make home un happy, and of the qualities which make it a paradise on earth, was as vivid as it was

Indeed, the whole lecture abounded in flashes of keen wit, well-told anecdotes, capital bits, sound philosophy, practical oints, and eloquent passages, and was one of the very best ever heard on a Richmond

This seemed to be the general verdict, and Professor Sheppard is sure of a large audience whenever he may again lecture

To "Lessing" Shakspeare was indebted for his first favorable introduction into Germany, the land that has since delighted to honor him with an adoption as complete as upon Germany's great musician, Handel. "Minna Von Barnbeln" is a true come-French and English style of its day. Its social tone and spirit of invention are peculiarly German, and its connection with the seven-years' war contributed to make it immensely successful at the time it was written: It is ingenious in plot, quick in movement, carrying throughout sustained and humorous interest, and af-forded in the hands of so fine an elocutionist as Dr. Armstrong a delightful entertainment.
